Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban is the next film in the Harry Potter trilogy. One hundred and ninety two million Harry Potter books have been sold in over 200 countries, and the books have been translated into at least fifty-five languages, including Latin. Now, can the film win the world's imagination in the same way?

Harry's fans want to see a film that is exactly like the book. They already know the characters like close friends - and they love Harry's magical world in their hearts. The British author, J.K. Rowling, wanted the film to be like the book too. 'Why should you take a book that works so well and change it?' she said.

But Harry's adventures are unique - with strange characters and places from another world. Harry and his friends live and go to school in England - but this is a magic England with its own streets, shops and schools ... even its own language! (In fact many of Rowling's words come from old English. Did you know that the headmaster's name, 'Dumbledore', is an old English word for bumblebee?!)

How can the film-makers, Warner Bros, make this unique magical world? Rowling was there to help at every stage. She worked hard to help turn her famous words into real things. Months of work and £100 million later, the special effects are ready. Everyone is waiting to see their favourite characters. We want to see Hagrid's frightening animals, the strange teachers, and Harry's clever white owl. The big question is, what will the actor playing Harry be like?

Sixteen thousand British and American boys auditioned for the part of Harry Potter. Rowling did not want an American to play Harry. The American director, Chris Columbus knew about Daniel Radcliffe from the BBC's TV film David Copperfield. Columbus asked Daniel's father to send Daniel for an audition. When Daniel walked into the room, Columbus knew. This is Harry Potter! Rowling agreed. She felt she was brought back together with a long-lost son.

Ten years ago JK Rowling was a young English teacher; today she is one of the richest and most famous people in the world. Harry has helped thousands of people - young and old - to enjoy reading and he hasn't stopped yet! Now Rowling has to turn quickly to her sixth Harry Potter book. After the film more people than ever will be waiting for Harry's next adventure!

1. Harry's fans know the book very well.
2. Rowling has written seven Harry Potter books.
3. Rowling helped with the film.
4. Rowling didn't think that Daniel Radcliffe was perfect for the part of Harry Potter.
5. The director doesn't use special effects.
6. "Hagrid" is the name of the headmaster from the Harry Potter books.
